Dikoloti applauds MOSISEDI farmers for resilience

By Aobakwe Molefhi

MOSISEDI - MOSISEDI farmers have been applauded for their unwavering resilience in ensuring the nation’s food security amidst challenges posed by climate change.

Speaking during MOSISEDI Harvest Day held at MOSISEDI Service Centre in Barolong Farms on Saturday, the acting Minister of Lands and Agriculture, Dr Edwin Dikoloti said farmers had shown dedication and commitment to development of the agricultural sector.

He said the theme for the show ‘Farming in a changing climate: Strategies for Growth and Sustainability,’ was relevant as the country was currently experiencing adverse effects of climate change.

Dr Dikoloti urged farmers, together with other value chain players to unite and develop better ways and means to reduce the impact of climatic challenges.

Furthermore, he urged stakeholders to partner with government in aligning development efforts towards achieving success and prosperity for all. Dr Dikoloti said MOSISEDI farmers had adopted strategies such as crop diversification and using crop varieties that were more drought resistant in order to deal with challenges brought by climate change. He urge farmers to share their vast knowledge and experience with the youth and women so that they too could contribute to wealth and employment creation.

Giving a keynote address Seedco Managing Director Mr Samson Ruwisi concurred that adverse climate changes like drought and erratic rainfall affected farm produce. Dr Dikoloti assured them that his Ministry was committed to stakeholder engagements through different means such as shows and conferences to improve the agricultural sector.

He said it was for that reason that his company produced seeds adaptable to climatic changes faced by farmers.

“Our main aim is to develop seeds that are climatic smart and produce high yield,” he said. BOPA

‘Be courageous in unearthing corruption’

By Gontle Merafhe

GABORONE - The media have been implored to be courageous in their quest to unearth corruption.

Speaking at the occasion of the Botswana Editors Forum Press Freedom Day celebration in Gaborone on Friday, Chief Justice Gaolapelwe Ketlogetswe reminded the media that their role was to hold those in positions of power accountable as an oversight body.

He said journalists needed courage to investigate and unearth corruption, making bravery a virtue.

Justice Ketlogetswe however observed that challenges faced by the private media were not necessarily faced by the state media.

He said the economic realities of Botswana were that government possessed more resources than the private sector and the private press needed government business through advertising and other forms of investment.

“History will attest that when investigative journalism unearthed some inconvenient truths about those then in government, the response was to stop government advertisement in certain private media houses. The result has been a slow but noticeable death in investigative journalism.”

The chief justice said the consequences of the death of investigative journalism was unfortunately governance without accountability.

“The might of the adverts has led to self-regulation,” he observed.

Chief Justice Ketlogetswe said the greatest threat to press freedom was self-reservation in the form of self-censorship brought about by an existential plight as the media operated in a hostile economic environment.

Also, he said a number of statutes such as the Constitution guaranteed the right to receive and disseminate information for public consumption while the Penal Code provided for a criminal defamation.

The chief justice said absence of a duty to avail information of a public nature by those holding such information led to opacity in governance.

“Under the veil of that opacity, there is secrecy and unjustifiable or unjustified confidentiality. Then you have the melting pot of corruption behind that veil. It thrives,” he said.

The chief justice said behind that was the dilemma of journalists as news was a perishable commodity that required expedition in its dissemination.

“This made journalists to balance between meeting deadlines and protecting the rights of those affected by stories leading to criminal defamation, violation of laws protecting state secrets and personality rights of those concerned.”

Chief Justice Ketlogetswe said that has led to lawsuits against journalists.

He said there has been an engagement between the media and government to come up with a more progressive legislation to improve access to information.

He urged the media to fight for what was rightfully theirs, which is the right to disseminate information as the Constitution dictates.

The chief justice further advised journalists to consider demanding that the Press Freedom Day be included in the public calendar as a holiday to celebrate the media and use it to educate the public on their role as the press.

For his part, the Minister of Local Government and Traditional Affairs, Mr Ketlhalefile Motshewaga said the media was a fundamental component of democracy, transparency and public accountability.

He said the media in Botswana had nurtured democracy, public education and shaped national dialogue.

Mr Motshewaga also said a free objective media was an essential component of any democratic society providing the public with information to make responsible informed decisions.

He said the inherited setup of state media controlled by Office of the President where the government controlled content and making less coverage of opposition and dissenting voices, was abuse of state media for self-preservation by government.

The minister said as citizens, they were given one side of the story subjecting Batswana to missing real stories concerning their lives.

Mr Motshewaga said there was need for state media to report news focused on the lives of the people with diversity.

He said media should be seen as an enabler of democracy and it was therefore important to have a public broadcaster funded by government but with an independent board.

“Let me assure you of the commitment of government to social dialogue in instances of introduction of regulatory measures so that such does not stifle the independence and functionality of media.

Collaboration is essentially cardinal between government, state media and civic society to ensure that laws protect press freedom while promoting responsibility,” he said. BOPA

Govt mitigates climate change effects

By Keonee Majoto

TSABONG - Building climate resilience particularly in rural farming communities can help Botswana attain its aspirations to reinvent agriculture and set the sector on course to once again be a key contributor to the national Gross Domestic Product (GDP).

Officiating at the launch of a Ecosystem-Based Adaptation and Mitigation in Botswana's Communal Rangelands project aimed at mitigating the effects of climate change on Botswana's communal rangelands in Tsabong yesterday, President Advocate Duma Boko said with the sector's contribution to the GDP having declined from 40 to 1.7 per cent over the years, it was necessary that efforts be intensified to reverse the status quo.

Attributing the decline to several challenges among them unfavourable climatic conditions whose effects included frequent and prolonged spells of drought as well as erratic rainfall patterns, President Boko said the take-off of the adaptation and mitigation project was timely as it came at a time when government had renewed its keenness to root out poverty from among its people.

He said the project, with its objective to reach 247 000 people in 104 villages in Ngami, Kgalagadi and Bobirwa regions, would empower rural communities by positively impacting their economies at household level.

"Maikaelelo a rona ke go ntsha lehuma ka kgoro tsa motse gore batho ba rona ba kgone go tshela botoka," he said, underlining why it was crucial to have all hands on deck in order to guarantee the success of the project.

President Boko also highlighted that the project would encompass marginalised pockets of society including women, the youth and People with Disabilities (PWDs), whom he said would make up 54 per cent of beneficiaries.

Commending Green Climate Fund (GCF) Agency and Conservation International for partnering with Botswana on the implementation of the project, the President disclosed that government had contributed P1 billion to the project, whose total cost he said stood at P13.1 billion (US$496.7 million).

"The partnership by government and key players in issues of conservation such as the Green Climate Fund and Conservation International has seen us pool together resources, with government contributing P1 billion," he said.

Chief field officer at Conservation International Mr Jimmiel Mandima said Conservation International had recently launched an ambitious 10-year strategy for the Africa region to protect and restore 100 million hectares, a milestone which he said would be achieved through the joint efforts of governments, partners, local communities and global institutions.

Mr Mandima said their efforts had since protected iconic landscapes and wildlife, stabilised climate and improved the livelihoods of millions of people.

He said the impact priorities of Conservation International included mobilising finance at large scale to support conservation and food production systems, to support nature-positive livelihoods in partnership with local communities, the private sector and governments.

Assuring Botswana of Conservation International support, Mr Mandima said the organisation would bring lessons from comparable initiatives in other parts of Africa.

He said the Botswana project would serve as a great example for the SADC region of what could be achieved through working with indigenous people, which he said was key to resolving global crises while delivering sustainable development.

Ms Portia Segomelo of Conservation International's Botswana arm said the project was driven by the need to protect Botswana's rangelands in the face of climate change, thereby building the resilience of communities reliant on agriculture. She also stated that the project would entail merging the good that could be drawn from both traditional and contemporary measures and strategies that could be beneficial in combating the effects of climate change. BOPA

De Beers closes synthetics business

By Tebagano Ntshole

MOLEPOLOLE - De Beers Group intends to close down its lab-grown diamond (LGD) jewellery brand, Lightbox, illustrating its commitment to natural diamonds. A press release from De Beers Group, states that the company was discussing sales of certain assets, including inventory, with potential buyers.

The company states that Lightbox was established in 2018 and has highlighted that LGDs were a distinct product from natural diamonds, with different attributes and different value. "The business was launched with transparent linear pricing of US$800 (about P10 800) per carat.

Since then, LGDs prices in the jewellery sector have fallen 90 per cent at wholesale, tracking closer to a cost-plus model as they have diverged from natural diamond prices," reads the press release.

Due to sharp price decline, De Beers has now made the decision to discontinue Lightbox business. "The evolution of LGDs values in the jewellery sector underpins De Beers Group's core belief in rare, high-value, natural diamond jewellery as a separate category from low-cost, mass-produced LGD jewellery," states the release.

It says the proposed closure of the Lightbox business reflects a key executional milestone in De Beers Group's Origins Strategy, as set out in May 2024, to focus on high-return activities and streamline the business.

The release says the closure will enable De Beers Group to reallocate investment to initiatives focused on reinvigorating desire for natural diamonds through category marketing.

"De Beers Group will work closely with employees, retail partners, suppliers, and other stakeholders to ensure a smooth process over the coming months. Customers will continue to receive support for existing purchases, including warranties and after-sales services, during the closure process," it says.

Meanwhile, Element Six, De Beers Group's subsidiary that previously produced lab grown stones for Lightbox, will maintain its exclusive focus on industrial solutions using synthetic diamonds.

De Beers states that Element Six was well-positioned to seize the rapidly growing potential for synthetic diamond applications across a range of future-facing technologies and applications.

"By centralising chemical vapor deposition (CVD) synthetic diamond production at its state-of-the-art facility in Oregon, US, Element Six will work with its growing global network of partners to accelerate cutting-edge technologies for high growth industries, such as semiconductors and quantum technologies."

The release says with a track record of growth and profitability, Element Six is favourably positioned to drive the future of synthetic diamond solutions in industrial and high-tech applications.

Al Cook, Chief Executive Officer of De Beers Group, is quoted saying, "As we move towards becoming a standalone company, we continue to optimise our business, reduce costs and build a focused De Beers that is positioned for profitable growth.

The persistently declining value of lab-grown diamonds in jewellery underscores the growing differentiation between these factory-made products and natural diamonds.

Lightbox has helped to highlight the fundamental differences in value between these two categories. Global competition continues to intensify with more low-cost lab-grown diamond production from China. In the US, supermarkets are driving down lab-grown diamond jewellery prices.

"Overall, we expect both the cost and price of lab-grown diamonds to fall further in the jewellery sector," said De Beers CEO

He said the planned closure of Lightbox reflected their commitment to natural diamonds and they were excited by the growing commercial potential for synthetic diamonds in the technology and industrial space. BOPA

BDP new president promises a united force

By Esther Mmolai

MAUN - In order to take the Botswana Democratic Party (BDP) back to its glory days, the newly elected BDP president, Mr Mpho Balopi has underscored the need to trace its footsteps to the founding principles that promoted unity, stability and peace.

Addressing party members at the just ended 41st National Congress held in Maun over the weekend, he said the future of the BDP was their hands, stating that the time for factions and internal fights was over.

He extended an invitation to former members who had been unjustly expelled and suspended from the party to retrace their steps with immediate effect so that they embark on the transformative drive of the party as a unit.

Mr Balopi acknowledged that the party lost power after leading Batswana for 58 years and believed through cooperation and teamwork, they could take the party back into government in 2029.

“As the sixth president of BDP as an opposition party, I am going to be the first to take BDP back to power and I can manage that through your support and teamwork and I welcome all democrats who have been expelled and suspended to re-join the party so that we rebuild it together,” Mr Balopi said, emphasising the importance of national unity and true democracy, which he described as the foundation upon which the BDP was built.

He vowed to work closely with all party structures and all those who contested for party positions to protect the good reputation of the party.

He appealed to the party followers to refrain from using statements that fuel division within the party calling them to be loyal to the party and to support those elected into structures. He pledged to rebuild a party that respects democracy and puts Batswana’s interest above its own.

Mr Balopi indicated that there would be an inaugural veterans conference after the winter season so that they recognise and appreciate their veterans citing that the summit would also serve as a platform to reflect on the party’s history, and discuss where the party lost its way.

He said the veterans would share advice and also elect their own structure, whose chairperson would be become ex-officio member of the Central Committee.

Mr Balopi also appreciated the party founders’ contribution citing all previous presidents saying they have tirelessly worked for the growth of the party, indicating that they instilled the value of unity, which was key for the party’s historical success.

He underscored the need to review the party constitution to make it relevant to today’s reality as an opposition party saying initially, it was developed for a party in power.

He cited that the constitution was silent on election of a vice president saying the president used his discretion to appoint the party chairman as his vice, which he termed unconstitutional.

Mr Balopi thanked BDP members for exercising their political right to elect a new central committee, appreciating that some members within the committee had a wealth of experience as they once sat in the previous executive committees.

He cited himself as he served as the secretary general, the likes of the new secretary general and treasurer, Mr Kentse Rammidi and Mr Kagiso Mmusi among others.

In other positions, the Moshupa-Manyana area MP, Mr Karabo Gare was elected the party chairperson while Mr Bakani Thukuthe and Mr Tshepho Jim were elected deputy secretary general and deputy treasurer while Dr Alfred Madigele, Mr Baemedi Medupi, Ms Rubiena Kablay, Mr Akim Setswalo and Mr Duelang Setswalo claimed additional members’ seats respectively. BOPA

Official encourages mothers to be phenomenal

By Kelebogile Taolo

FRANCISTOWN - Integrity and trustworthiness are the qualities a mother ought to have in their journey of raising families and children.

The remarks were made by Kgosi Norah Gulubane of Gulubane during Mother’s Day celebration Sunday in Francistown.

Kgosi Gulubane said Mother’s Day served as an opportunity for women to reflect on their roles and appealed to them to guard against anything that could divide their families.

She said women should have integrity and avoid having multiple partners which could lead to uncertainty regarding the who fathered their children.

Kgosi Gulubane said women should take control of their lives, have their own source of income and not rely on anyone for financial security.

Pastor Lilian Mmoloki of Open Gates International Church, highlighted the importance of mothers in raising healthy and happy children.

The celebration session was organised by an Anti-Gender Based Violence (GBV) Activist Ms Gosego Mmolawa with the aim to share insights and knowledge with different mothers on various issues that affect them.

Ms Mmolawa said to celebrate being a mother meant being fully aware of the responsibilities of a mother, raising children who would positively contribute to the society as well as fully understanding children’s rights. BOPA

Women break barriers with innovation, style

By Bakang Wren

GABORONE - Women Evolve BW recently celebrated its fifth anniversary, marking the milestone with an event themed: Women Evolve in STEM.

One of the most compelling segments of the event was the session by Ms Keleadile Ruda, an energy engineer who shared her journey of working in a male-dominated sector.

Ms Ruda spoke about how she and six other women founded a network to foster gender inclusivity after realising the lack of mentorship when they graduated.

“We wanted to create a support system for women who would otherwise feel isolated in the energy field,” Ms Ruda said, emphasising that building a community of passionate, talented women was essential to ensuring future generations would have role models and mentors.

Another inspiring story came from Ms Phatsimo Matshidiso, popularly known as Miss Moringa, who spoke about merging her scientific background with entrepreneurship.

She shared how during the COVID-19 pandemic, she realised the health benefits of Moringa and began promoting it as a superfood.

“Moringa is rich in iron, calcium, potassium, and vitamin C, making it an essential part of a balanced diet,” she explained.

Ms Matshidiso shared that her journey to entrepreneurship was driven by the need to address health challenges during COVID-19, blending scientific knowledge with practical applications.

Ms Zandile Mkwana from South Africa, who has a background in computational and applied mathematics, shared her passion for making tech accessible to young girls.

She said that after noticing that the people building technology did not look like her, she founded Girl Code to empower young girls through coding and technology innovation.

“Seeing women succeed in tech can inspire young girls to pursue careers in the field,” she emphasised. Speakers at the event addressed misconceptions and challenges that women in STEM continued to face.

They agreed that representation was crucial, as it gave young girls the confidence to enter fields traditionally dominated by men.

They also discussed the importance of building supportive networks and challenging societal stereotypes that labelled confident women as too bold or loud.

Speaking in an interview, the founder and Managing Director of Women Evolve BW, Ms Boineelo Palai explained that the theme was inspired by the desire to merge two seemingly different worlds; STEM and fashion.

“It’s about showing that women can lead in science and technology while embracing elegance and style,” she said.

Ms Palai emphasised that the theme encouraged women to confidently bring their full selves into every space, whether it be a lab, a boardroom, or a runway.

Reflecting on the journey of Women Evolve BW, Ms Palai said that the event had grown tremendously since its inception.

“Over the past five years, we have evolved from a small, intimate gathering to a nationally recognised platform that empowers hundreds of women annually,” she said.

Ms Palai highlighted that the event had consistently expanded its programming to include international speakers, mentorship initiatives, and capacity-building opportunities.

She noted that the event had shifted its focus from financial literacy to STEM and was now exploring fashion and innovation.

Highlighting the lineup of speakers and special guests, event organisers expressed excitement about featuring Dr Wedu Somolekae, a leader in Aesthetic Medicine, and Ms Phatsimo Matshidiso, a scientist making significant strides in Botswana’s innovation space.

Ms Nicolette Mashile also made a return to explore Fintech and the potential for women in digital economies.

Additionally, the event featured the Women Evolve Lounge Experience and exhibitions by local entrepreneurs and innovators, offering attendees the chance to explore new ideas and connect with like-minded individuals. BOPA

Francistown mayor calls for walkways on roads

By Thamani Shabani

FRANCISTOWN - The absence of walkways on numerous roads and highways is a major contributor to and often the cause of serious and fatal pedestrian accidents, says Francistown mayor, Mr Gaone Majere.

He was speaking at the Motor Vehicle Accident Fund (MVA Fund) 2025 Safe Mobility Challenge in Francistown on Saturday.

While acknowledging lack of walkways, Mr Majere said pedestrians retained the right to use the roadsides, and that drivers had a responsibility to respect that right.

He further proposed incorporating pedestrian safety awareness into the driver's licence testing process to address the lack of respect for pedestrians among motorists.

Mr Majere highlighted the challenge's role in promoting active mobility, emphasising the importance of walking and cycling for personal health and road safety.

He further underscored the global significance of road safety saying the World Health Organisation's (WHO) 2023 report, indicated that 1.19 million lives were lost annually due to road traffic accidents globally, with vulnerable road users comprising 53 per cent of these fatalities.

MVA Fund chief executive officer, Mr Michael Tlhagwane noted a significant increase in pedestrian fatalities over the past five years, saying Botswana lost an average of 400 lives annually to road traffic accidents, with pedestrians accounting for 30 per cent of these deaths, a figure that had risen from 21 per cent in 2019 to 32 per cent in the present.

In 2024, she said Francistown,

Mr Tlhagwane recorded eight pedestrian fatalities, 17 serious injuries and 83 minor injuries.

Additionally, he said one cyclist was killed and two others sustained injuries.

These figures, he said were alarming and preventable.

Meanwhile, Mr Tlhagwane explained that the Road Safety Challenge was a key initiative within the MVA Fund's broader strategic objective to improve road safety through targeted interventions focused on road user behaviour

He said road safety was multifaceted, encompassing accident prevention and improved post-crash care.

The fund's corporate and communications officer, Ms Ogomoditswe Mooketsi said MVA Fund continued to bear the immense financial burden of compensating victims of road accidents, fatalities, injuries, and property damage, amounting to millions of Pula annually.

Ms Mooketsi stressed the profound human cost beyond the financial implications.

She emphasised the Fund's commitment to preventative measures and community engagement noting that this year's theme: Be Seen, Be Safe, Your Life Matters, underscored the importance of visibility and caution for all road users.

She said choosing Francistown to host this year's event reflected the fund's commitment to nationwide outreach, particularly given the concerning rise in accidents involving pedestrians in areas like such the blocks, Maipaafela, and the Francistown bus rank.

Activities of the day included aerobics, cycling events (10km, 30km, and 60km) as well as running/walking options (5km, 10km, and 21km), all offered free of charge to encourage participation. BOPA

Tertiary institutions reach out to learners

By Portia Rapitsenyane

PALAPYE - The 2025 national tertiary institutions roadshow chairperson says it is crucial to uplift underprivileged girls and ensure that they have the resources they need to pursue their education with confidence.

"We know that access to dignity products is not a luxury. It is a right.

Without them, girls miss valuable school days, fall behind and sometimes even drop out," said Mr Duelang Ngwako at a donation ceremony of sanitary pads to learners at Lotsane Senior Secondary School in Palapye recently.

He said the donation was more than just education but also about giving back to the community.

He also said the donation was a celebration of a 10-year movement that had touched the lives of thousands Batswana.

He further said since they began this year's roadshow on April 7, they traversed 20 towns and villages, bringing tertiary education services directly to communities.

"While the world moves deeper into the digital era, with online applications, virtual open days and expanding internet access, we know that there is no substitute for human connection.

We know that no amount of online convenience can replace the power of institutions showing up in person, sitting down with learners, answering their questions, and guiding them in life-changing decisions," he said.

He therefore said the 23 tertiary institutions had committed themselves to travel the length and breadth of the country to make sure that no one was left behind and would ensure that all had access to relevant information.

Mr Ngwako also thanked the institutions for their dedicated efforts to traverse the country to reach out and give back, which showed a high level of commitment to national development.

Lotsane Senior School head of department, Mr Busang Lelatlhego appreciated the gesture and thanked the national roadshow committee for donating to the girl child in the school.

He also pleaded with them to also donate to the boy child because they also needed support.

The roadshow featured about 23 tertiary institutions that travelled across the country to bring services closer to the people and provide learners with opportunities to apply to institutions of higher learning of their choice. BOPA

Diratsame school addresses boy child delinquency

By Marvin Motlhabane

MOSHUPA - Kgosi Oscar Mosielele of Moshupa has reiterated the importance of academic achievements saying successful learners exhibit self discipline and responsible behaviour.

He was speaking at the stakeholder engagement pitso hosted by Diratsame II Junior Secondary School attended by the Parents-Teachers Association (PTA), male learners and some members of the community in order to address the issue of delinquent behaviour among the boy child, which affect their academic performance.

Therefore, he reminded them that their primary purpose in school was to learn and that they should avoid the behaviour that could hinder their academic success

He highlighted drug abuse as a significant crisis hindering academic performance, particularly among pupils, whose bodies were still developing.

He also advocated for the principles of upright behaviour, Botho, as essential for guiding the youth in their daily lives, reminding them that, as Batswana, the concept of Botho helped individuals to distinguish right from wrong.

School Head, Ms Grace Badisang explained that the pitso was a follow-up to their previous meeting with Kgosi Mosielele, where they discussed the significant academic achievements of the 2024 Junior Certificate Examinations (JCE) candidates.

She revealed that the school ranked fourth in the Southern region, with the boys' poor performance being a major concern and linked to delinquent behaviour.

Ms Badisang provided statistics indicating that for the 2024 JCE, the overall learner performance was at 48.8 per cent, with boys contributing only 36.7 per cent, while girls achieved 59.8 per cent. She asserted that the school's potential for a higher ranking could have been realised had the boys performed better academically.

She further presented a detailed analysis of the current Form three learners' performance in mid-year and final examinations saying the mid-year examinations showed a 37.4 per cent success rate overall, with boys at 18.8 per cent and girls at 51.8 per cent.

In the final examinations, she said the overall performance rose to 49.5 per cent, with boys achieving 42.7 per cent and girls obtaining 56.3 per cent.

Despite an improvement in boys' performance in the latter examinations, girls continued to outperform boys significantly, a trend that the school aims to address.

Ms Badisang also shared that the current Form Two learners had a mid-year average of 38.3 per cent, with boys scoring 19.1 per cent and girls 53.9 per cent.

The end-of-year average further declined to 34 per cent, with boys at seven per cent and girls at 27 per cent.

In light of the challenges posed by the boys' poor academic performance, Ms Badisang noted that the school had prioritised discipline and implemented a learner leadership programme to promote peer learning.

Meanwhile, the school has partnered with former First Lady Neo Masisi, who has pledged P10 000 for pupils achieving merit and P5 000 for those earning an A for the award ceremony scheduled for May 15, with Kgosi Mosielele also committing P3 000 to support academic excellence. BOPA

Fish festival enhances economic growth

By Baleseng Batlotleng

OLIPHANTS DRIFT

The Dinokeng Fish Festival is a shining example of how local ingenuity, cultural heritage and environmental stewardship could be woven into a strategy for sustainable livelihoods and inclusive economic empowerment.

This observation was made by Minister of Local Government and Traditional Affairs, Mr Ketlhalefile Motshegwa at the official opening of the annual Dinokeng Fish Festival in Oliphants Drift on Saturday.

He said the event was a bold statement about the power of community, innovation and sustainable development.

“It is an initiative that stands out as a beacon of hope and opportunity. It reflects our shared commitment to diversifying the rural economy, creating employment and reducing poverty through sustainable aquaculture. This is not just about fishing it is about food security, income generation and community resilience,” he said.

Held under the theme: Growing our economy together through fishing opportunities, Mr Motshegwa said it was a crucial demonstration that no economy was driven from the top but led by people at grassroots level using available resources within their communities.

He said the theme was premised on the fact that fishing could significantly contribute to economic growth especially for communities reliant on it for their livelihood and food security.

“Developing a sustainable aquaculture sector presents more opportunities in the long run for development across the economic, social and environmental fronts of our communities. It is a strategic initiative and platform where fresh ideas meet tradition, where local voices mix with global influences in transforming the local economic development landscape of the district,” he added.

Mr Motshegwa said the fish festival was a platform where food security, job creation and value chain development with regard to opportunities brought by the availability of fish were cultivated and nourished.

He noted the effects of climate change on aquaculture and said government was committed to finding alternative interventions to mitigate the challenges under the pillar for economic revitalisation and that of social development.

“We are committed as government to strengthen our partnerships and collaboration with development partners and private sector to work tirelessly to ensure our communities realise their full potential,” he said.

In an interview, chairman of the Almakaar Fishing Group Mr Dira Gouwe said fishing had the potential to contribute to the success and sustainability of economic growth in the river villages.

He said despite the promising signs of success in their trade they were inundated with a number of challenges as fishermen.

Mr Gouwe said they had successfully managed to get into a joint venture through the establishment of their cooperative society named Almakaar Fishing group.

He said lack of market access for their produce was also frustrating their efforts of eking a livelihood as fishermen.

Mr Gouwe appealed to government to assist with infrastructure development such as the establishment of fish ponds and other fishing implements. BOPA

Public lecture demystifies monetary policy

By Benita Magopane

GABORONE – Bank of Botswana (BoB) has over the years successfully maintained low and stable inflation while safeguarding financial system stability.

This, BoB’s Director of Research and Financial Stability, Mr Innocent Molalapata explained, had preserved the purchasing power of incomes, protected savings, encouraged investment, and enhanced the international competitiveness of local producers.

Mr Molalapata, who was speaking at a public lecture held at the BA ISAGO University Convention Centre recently, said “these efforts ultimately contribute to broader national objectives, such as sustainable economic development and overall national prosperity”.

He further explained that the bank’s monetary policy framework aimed to keep inflation within a medium-term target range of 3–6 per cent.

Mr Molalapata, said BoB had adopted a ranked dual mandate, price and financial stability, as outlined in the Bank of Botswana (Amendment) Act of 2022.

The primary objective, he noted, was to achieve and maintain stable domestic prices.

“What we mean is that we want prices to change at a predictable and acceptable rate,” he said.

Mr Molalapata also outlined some of the tools the bank used to implement monetary policy, which include the Monetary Policy Rate, open market operations like the auctioning of Bank of Botswana Certificates, and the issuance of one-month BoB Certificates to address structural liquidity issues and support the short end of the yield curve.

The lecture, aimed at enhancing public understanding of monetary policy decisions and their impact on the economy, was organised by the Botswana Institute of Banking and Finance (BIBF), Ba Isago University, and the Bank of BoB.

Held under the theme: The Bank of Botswana’s Dual Mandate of Ensuring Price and Financial Stability, and its Role in Fostering Stability and Growth, the event followed the BoB’s Monetary Policy Statement launch on February 19.

The lecture was prompted by the Bank’s observation of a gap in public understanding and appreciation of monetary policy and its effect on financial well-being.

BA ISAGO University Acting Dean of the Faculty of Commerce, Ms Olebogeng Mokgware, highlighted importance of making monetary policy accessible to all citizens, as it directly affected everyday matters such as interest rates and inflation.

“We believe that understanding the forces shaping our economy and personal finances isn’t just for economists or bankers, but for every Motswana who wants to make informed decisions in today’s financial landscape,” she said, expressing pride in the university’s collaboration with BIBF and BoB.

The event also included a panel discussion featuring distinguished guests from the banking industry, academia, and business associations. BOPA

BOFINET UPGRADES BOTSWANA'S INTERNET GATEWAY

Botswana Fibre Networks (BoFiNet) has recently completed two (2) strategic projects to upgrade the country's internet gateway and deliver significant enhancements in the bandwidth, security and reliability of the internet experience in Botswana.

The first project was the replacement of the national metro network within Gaborone, Francistown and Maun to enhance connectivity in strategic sites such as Government offices, shopping malls and business centres in these locations. The metro network is a high-speed network infrastructure designed to provide connectivity within Botswana between different offices, data centers and branches. It utilises fibre optic cables, offering very high data transfer speeds ranging from megabits per second (Mbps) to terabits per second (Tbps). The network will enable Internet Service Providers (ISPs) to aggregate traffic from various access networks; for example, Fibre to the Home, and connect it to their core network and the wider internet.

The second project entailed the upgrading of equipment and applications that form the gateway that carries internet traffic to and from Botswana. This equipment and applications are housed at special high-capacity sites in London (Global Switch and Telehouse) and Johannesburg (Teraco data centres DC9 and DC3) known as Points of Presence. They are the digital crossroads where BoFiNet directly links with Content Distribution Networks such as Google, Facebook, Netflix and Microsoft to bring content to Botswana via the undersea cables on the eastern and western coasts of Africa. The project also relocated some equipment from one of the Main Switch Units (MSU) in Gaborone to the recently-completed Digital Delta Data Centre (DDDC), which is a more resilient environment. The DDDC is a carrier-neutral data centre owned and operated by BoFiNet.

This project serves to address current and future internet capacity demands of customers and end-users, given the exponential increase of internet traffic to and from Botswana over the last 10 years.

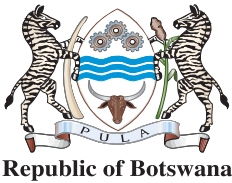

These two (2) projects will enable customers to enjoy higher capacities, higher speed, more security and overall a more seamless user experience; all while ensuring that the internet gateway is equipped for the future. When updating the media on the two (2) projects during a media engagement session recently, the Acting Chief Executive Officer (CEO) of BoFiNet, Mr Mpho Koolese, stated that BoFiNet remains committed to its mandate of driving connectivity and economic growth with its network infrastructure. "We stand firmly behind the Government in delivering on our mandate and advancing the country's aspirations of a digital future. These two (2) projects that we have just completed are critical to the functioning of our internet infrastructure in the country, which is a key driver of socio-economic growth and the Government's digital transformation agenda. They will deliver a major boost to services such as e-health, e-education, smart Government services and Internet of Things," Koolese concluded.

BoFiNet recently held a media engagement event to report on this project. Addressing the media were (1). The three (3) engineers that were spearheading the upgrade project; Ms. Onalethata Mosaikamo, Ms. Mercy Mmolotsi and Ms. Seneo Pule. (2). Head of Technology, Mr. Boikarabelo Ramaretlwa. (3). Chief Executive Officer (A), Mr Mpho Koolese.

The Botswana Unified Revenue Service (BURS) has noted with concern recurring instances of non-compliance in the importation of second-hand motor vehicles, in contravention of the Customs Act, 2018. Specific concerns include unauthorized interference with the Customs Management System, dual invoicing intended to conceal the true customs value, and the failure to submit national identification or residence permit documents to evade applicable customs duties and taxes.

Importers and clearing agents are also reminded that the submission of accurate information and supporting documents is mandatory.

BURS hereby advises that any importer, clearing agent or customs warehouse licensee found to be in violation of these requirements will face legal consequences, including seizure of vehicles, revocation of customs clearance or warehousing licenses, imposition of fines of up to P1 million, and/or criminal prosecution in accordance with the Customs Act.

The cooperation and compliance of all stakeholders in upholding these requirements is highly appreciated.

Spirit of Praise mesmerises revellers

By Lesedi Thatayamodimo

GABORONE - In a powerful celebration of life, faith and music, some of southern Africa's most iconic gospel artistes gathered on Saturday to honour the late gospel legend, Mmereki Marakakgoro, whose heartfelt songs and unwavering devotion left an indelible mark on the genre.

The all star-studded memorial concert held at the University of Botswana Indoor Sports Arena in Gaborone on Saturday, drew fans and fellow musicians for a touching tribute to the man affectionately known as Botswana's 'Voice of Worship'.

The concert, aptly titled: Spirit of Praise All Stars Botswana Concert, featured performances from some of South Africa's most celebrated gospel voices, including Benjamin Dube, Mmatema, Winnie Mashaba, Zaza, Nothando, Rofhiwa, Ayanda, Dumi Mkokstad, Omega and Keke.

Each brought their unique sound and spiritual energy to the stage in honour of Marakakgoro.

Botswana's own gospel talents, including Noah Samuel and Tlo-tlo, as well as the Calvary Apostolic Church Brass Band, also serenaded the audience with moving tributes.

Marakakgoro, who passed away in 2023, rose to prominence in the late 1980s with a signature blend of traditional Setswana gospel and contemporary worship.

Known for timeless classics such as Eat Some More, Romela Tsoeletso, Nneneketsa, and When the Going Gets Tough, his voice became a source of spiritual comfort for generations of believers across the region.

As the Spirit of Praise All Stars delivered electrifying performances that moved the audience from dance to worship, the concert became a fitting tribute to Marakakgoro's legacy, one rooted in faith, community and the transformative power of music that uplift the soul.

The emotional high point of the evening came when all artistes united on stage for a heartfelt performance of Re Tshepile Wena, one of the most beloved hymns by the late Neyi Zimu, a fellow gospel icon. As cellphone lights lit up the arena, the crowd sang in unison a moving display of unity and reverence.

Presenting the commemorative photo frame, Gaba Gabriella Mogapi praised Marakakgoro for being a 'national treasure whose music transcended borders and religious divides'.

She paid homage and told stories of how Marakakgoro's ministry had inspired careers and touched countless lives, adding that he left an indelible mark on the genre with his stirring vocals, profound lyrics, and unwavering commitment to faith-based music.

His widow, Bonegang Marakakgoro, expressed gratitude for the support from fans and artistes.

"Mmereki sang not just for crowds, but for souls. He believed music was a ministry. And today, you have all reminded us of that," she said, holding the photo frame presented to her.

As the final notes echoed into the night, it was clear that Marakakgoro's legacy will continue to live on, through the music, the memories and the millions of hearts he touched.

Organisers made special provisions to accommodate older attendees, including priority seating, ensuring they could fully enjoy the evening.

"I haven't felt this alive in years," said 74-year-old Dineo Kabong. "It reminded me of the revival days. The music, the message, it was all food for the soul."

I feel 30 years younger today," beamed 82-year-old Gofaone Kebone, a retired teacher and lifelong choir member.

"The music spoke to my soul. I have not clapped and danced like that in years."

The event ended with a powerful rendition of Total Praise that had many in the audience standing with hands raised in worship.

At end of the festival, 89-year-old Leonard Moruti summed up the day perfectly: 'This was more than a festival, it was a blessing'.

He nevertheless expressed disappointment that the event was not an all-night festival saying he desired to spend the night worshipping.

The event also included prayer sessions with many attendees saying the festival was not just entertainment, but a spiritual experience that reminded them of the power of faith and community.

BNSC pleads for continuation of sponsorship

By Moshe Galeragwe

GABORONE - The acting chief executive officer of the Botswana National Sports Commission (BNSC), Makuke Makuke, has urged Metropolitan Botswana to reconsider its decision to end a two-decade sponsorship of the sporting code.

Speaking at the award ceremony of the Metropolitan Chess Championship finals in Gaborone on Sunday, Makuke said the company's P160 000 sponsorship for the 2025 event had raised concerns as it signalled the conclusion of a nearly 20-year relationship with chess in Botswana.

"I am here to plead with Metropolitan to stay with you

Car spinning opens opportunities to boost economy

By Keith Ketl

PALAPYE - Car spinning presents opportunities to diversify the economy by generating economic activity in various sectors, boosting tourism and fostering innovation.

Speaking in an interview with on the sidelines of a car spinning event in Palapye dubbed 'MJ Louw Spin Bash,' the organiser Seremeng Seremeng said racing series events attracted international participants, spectators and businesses leading to increased spending in hotels, restaurants and other establishments.

In addition, he said the high-tech nature of the sport with its focus in engineering, aerodynamics, and data analysis could drive innovation and create new jobs in related industries.

He is of the view that car spinning brings in tourists, directly boosting hotel occupancy rates, restaurants sales and other related businesses.

Furthermore, he said the pursuit of speed and efficiency in car spinning drives innovation in areas like aerodynamics, material science and data analysis.

Seremeng said the construction and customisation of car spinning vehicles and related infrastructure as well as the provision of the services like insurance and maintenance, create jobs and generate revenue in various sectors.

He opined that the media coverage and advertisements associated with such events generate further economic activity, noting car spinning also creates a platform for young people to develop skills in areas like engineering, car spinning and events management.

The event, which was in its fourth edition, is growing better and bigger with the numbers of participants and spectators increasing every year.

Hinting on the objectives of the event, Seremeng said such platforms present opportunities for aspiring the youth to learn car spinning skills from established professional spinners.

Moreover, he said the event is meant to provide and promote tourism diversity as well as to raise awareness about car spinning sport.

As for the sport code to soar to greater heights, he said the input of government, the private sector and all stakeholders is needed to ensure the sport is nurtured until it reaches maturity level.

Seremeng is of the opinion that such events divert people particularly the youth from unbecoming behaviour to focus on positive things that can uplift their lives, thus he urged Batswana to embrace the sport for it to grow.

However, he said every spinner who took part in the event was insured through Botswana Motor Sport. In a subsequent interview, one of the participants, known as Boss Lady from No Direction fame, described car spinning as a thrilling experience.

She emphasised that while the sport is still growing, it requires nurturing to reach its peak.

Boss Lady noted that car spinning is not for everyone; it demands hard work, practice, precision, time, and sponsorship for it to flourish.

Additionally, she highlighted the importance of publicity to increase public awareness of the sport.

She also called for proper facilities and management to elevate the sport to greater heights.

For his part, Mothusi Alfred, who goes by the stage name King Joe from Northside Crew fame, acknowledged that the organizers did their best to ensure the event's success, although some challenges were inevitable but manageable.

He lamented the lack of sponsorship for the sport, which he described as expensive.

Participants often have to dig deep into their pockets, driven by their passion for the sport and a desire for its growth.

Regarding the ingredients for the sport's development, King Joe emphasized the need for facilities, including tarmac or paved fields for practice. He pointed out that the current lack of such amenities hinders growth.

He suggested that car spinning could serve both as a form of entertainment and a potential source of livelihood, as well as educational entertainment.

King Joe noted that the sport presents opportunities for tourism diversification.

For example, in 2024, South African professional spinners traveled to an island in Aruba, South America, to compete in a car spinning event that proved to be lucrative. He mentioned Sam, a South African professional spinner sponsored by Red Bull, akin to Letsile Tebogo, who also receives support from the same company.

He urged local businesses to follow the example set by their South African counterparts, emphasising that car spinning in the country should have a proper governing body so that individuals can make a living from the sport.

for the next 20 years," he said, expressing gratitude towards the company for its significant role in the development and growth of sports.

He said government grant was not enough as it was shared and share among the different sporting codes,

"I implore you to give more support to sport. As the BNSC, we will do all in our power to ensure that, as a company supporting sport, you get value for your money by producing positive results.

Kindly reconsider your decision, grow chess, and make it big.

It is a premium sporting code and can make your company shine."

In an acknowledgment of the championship winners' dedication, Makuke highlighted chess's ability to foster well-rounded individuals who could strategise not only in their games but also in contributing to the country's economy.

Thatayotlhe Molatole, Finance Manager at Metropolitan

Botswana, noted the positive legacy established over the past 20 years, emphasising the importance of celebrating the achievements made through the partnership.

"It is important to focus more on the positives that have been achieved over the years.

Together we can," he said reinforcing the belief that the partnership has effectively grown chess in Botswana.

Celebrating the event on Mother's Day, Molatole also recognised the contributions of mothers in encouraging their children to engage with chess.

"It has been a long and beneficial relationship, where individual players used the annual championship to grow," he stated.

International Master (IM) Providence Oatlotse, the 2025 Metropolitan Chess Champion, expressed disbelief at the impending conclusion of the sponsorship.

Winning his eighth title,

Oatlotse said. "I had wanted to continue taking part in the championship and do the double digit of wins with Metropolitan by our side." He acknowledged the pressure from younger competitors, stating, 'I felt the pressure from the young players.'

In the championship, Gaasitse Sebetlela claimed second place while Gofaone Kobe earned a bronze medal.

Women Candidate Master (WCM) Laone Moshoboro, the women's champion, thanked Metropolitan for its support, which has enabled the Botswana Chess Federation (BCF) to consistently host annual tournaments.

She urged for additional financial backing to expand the number of tournaments, emphasising the support from her parents in her journey to victory.

Maya Otimile (WCM) and Amolemo Mosweu (WCM) took second and third positions, respectively. BOPA
